British Regiments in Van Diemen's Land 1803 – 1870

Initially settlements in Van Diemen's Land (VDL) and New South Wales (NSW) were made with two objectives in mind, to deprive other countries, particularly France, of the land known as New Holland and to develop a penal colony.

The role of protector of the new colony, administrator, judge, jury, architect, turnkey and works supervisor fell on the British soldier.

During this period the number of soldiers stationed in VDL varied from a mere handful of the below listed regiments to a full regiment of about 400 all ranks.

Not all were stationed at Anglesea Barracks. As the colony developed soldiers were stationed across VDL on locations that required as few as three men to other places such as Port Arthur that required as many as ..... Regiments normally rotated UK – Australia/NZ- India- UK. They did not arrive as one body and it would often take two to three years to dribble soldiers out as guards on convict transports which had varying numbers of convicts to guard.

In 1811 Governor Lachlan Macquarie
