1. INTRODUCTION

Cyril St Clair Cameron was born at the family property Fordon, Nile in northern Tasmania in 1857, the second son of prominent pastoralist and politician Donald Cameron. Cyril Cameron's military career was to see him serve with the British Army, Tasmanian Defence Force and Australian Army between 1877 and 1916. His distinguished military service was notable for his involvement in a number of key military events including: -

- As Second Lieutenant with the 9th Lancers (British Army) participating in General Roberts advance from Kabul to Khandahar and the subsequent battle which ended the Second Afghan War in 1880,
- As Major (Tasmanian Defence Force) commanding the first Tasmanian contingent to the Boer War in 1898 – the first Tasmanian Defence Force unit to serve overseas and the first to be involved in military action.
- As Lieutenant Colonel (Australian Army) commanding the Australian contingent to the Coronation of Edward VII in 1902 – the first Australian army unit to serve overseas under Australian Commonwealth legislation
- As Colonel (British Army) serving as part of General Sir Ian Hamilton's general staff and landing with the British Forces at Gaba Tepe, Gallipoli Peninsula on April 25th, 1915.

In February 1887 Cyril Cameron was appointed Sub-Lieutenant with the Royal South Down Militia and soon after that year was promoted to Lieutenant. In 1879 he transferred to the 1st Dragoon Guards as a Second Lieutenant and then in January 1880 he again transferred to the 9^h Lancers which had suffered significant losses in Afghanistan. In March 1880 he had joined the 9th Lancers in Afghanistan and took part in General Roberts march from Kabul to Khandahar and the battle of Kandahar in September that year.

Cyril Cameron was promoted to Lieutenant in January 1881 and was to serve with the 9^h Lancers in India until the Regiment returned to England in 1885. In 1887 he was promoted to Captain and married Margaret Honeywood Hughes the daughter of General Sir William Hughes, Indian Army. Two years later in 1889 he was seconded from the 9th Lancers for service as Adjutant with the Queen's Own Royal Staffordshire Yeomanry Cavalry Regiment and then from 1892 he served as Adjutant to the 8th Yeomanry Brigade.

In 1894 he retires from service with the 9th Lancers and returns to Tasmania to the family property Fordon following the death of his father in 1890. He became actively involved in local government and was elected Warden of Evandale in 1896. He maintained his strong interest in defence issues and in 1898 was commissioned as Captain in the Tasmanian Defence Force and officer in command of the Evandale Company of the 2nd Battalion of the Tasmanian Infantry Regiment.

Following the decision of the Tasmanian Colonial Government to contribute military forces to the Anglo-Boer War in South Africa Cyril Cameron was appointed Officer Commanding the 1st Tasmanian Contingent in October 1899. This appointment recognised his military experience and in particular involvement in active service in Afghanistan. Soon after the Tasmanian Contingent arrived at Cape Town in November, Cyril Cameron was promoted to Major in the Tasmanian Infantry Regiment.

The Tasmanian Mounted Infantry saw active service in South Africa under the command of Major Cameron. During this time, he was wounded and captured near Arundel after giving his horse to a wounded soldier. Following his release, he was wounded again in action at the Zand River in May 1900. In December that year the first Tasmanian contingent returned to Tasmania. In February 1901 he was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel "for distinguished services in South Africa" and later that year invested as a Companion of the Order of the Bath.

During his service in South Africa, Cyril Cameron had become an extremely popular figure with the Tasmanian community. Soon after his return, he successfully stood as a Tasmanian representative for the Senate in the first Commonwealth elections held in April 1901.

In 1902 Cyril Cameron was appointed to command the Australian military contingent to represent Australia in the ceremonies associated with the coronation of Edward VII in London. This was to be the first Australian military contingent to serve overseas under Commonwealth legislation.

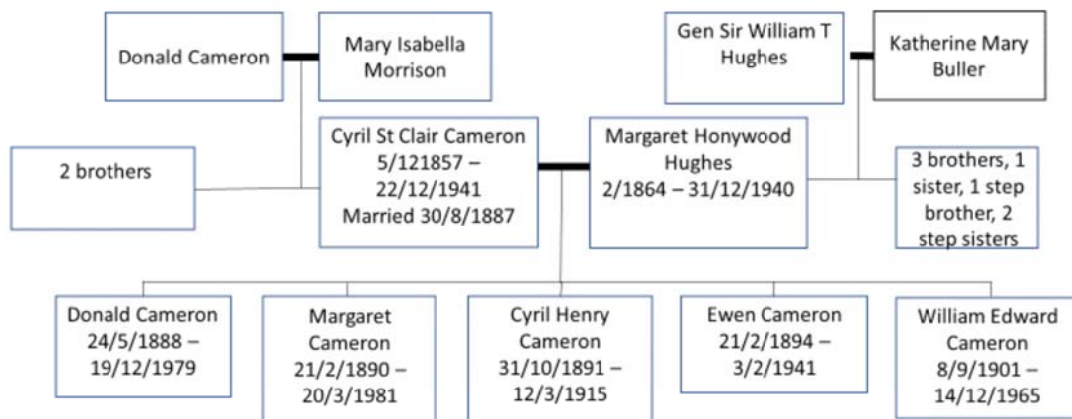

At the beginning of 1903 Lieutenant Colonel Cameron was appointed the Commanding Officer of the 12th Australian Light Horse Regiment. He was to be involved with this Regiment and its successors as Commanding Officer and then Honorary Colonel for the next two decades. In December 1903 he lost the election for the Senate but in 1906 he was again elected to the Senate to represent Tasmania and was to continue to do so until 1913. During this time, he spoke frequently on defence matters and the development of Australia's military capacity including the need for universal military training.

Following the declaration of war in 1914 Lieutenant Colonel Cameron travelled to Britain arriving in November that year. He returned to service with the British Army, was promoted to Colonel and joined General Birdwood's general staff in Egypt in December. He then served as adjutant general on General Sir Ian Hamilton's staff in the planning for the landings on the Gallipoli Peninsula. He landed with the British 3rd Brigade at Gabe Tepe on April 25th. In June 1915 at the age of 57 he was invalided from Gallipoli, returned to Australia in August and was not to return to active service.

Colonel Cameron continued his strong interest in defence issues until his death at Fordon in December 1941. His three eldest sons were all to serve in the British Army.
